Theda,

At the event the other day I promised to follow up with you about being on the advisory board. Being on the advisory board doesn't give him any formal responsibility or liability -- it's basically a statement that you are supportive of and interested in our work and in principle will be involved when there's a good opportunity. We might ask you to judge presentations, speak at events, advise us on policy priorities, introduce us to people, etc. You can always decline, it's in-principle support.

The kind of things we will ask you for are:

- referring bright students to us
- referreeing policy proposals
- forwarding publication opportunities to students writing theses
- lending your name to the organization
- potentially speaking at events

You can look at other members of our advisory board at <http://rooseveltinstitution.org/advisoryboard> .

Cheers,

Kai
